Guelph Student Association election results

By Nicole Hart

The election results for the Guelph Student Association were announced Thursday, March 27, and initial feelings were mixed. At the time, David Lee, vice president of the GSA, said the GSA was the best of the Guelph College, and he was proud of the Guelph Student Association. The results for some students were mixed, with some students not getting as many votes as they wanted, and some students getting more votes than they wanted.

However, president David Lee said that the GSA was the best of the Guelph College, and he was proud of the Guelph Student Association. The results for some students were mixed, with some students not getting as many votes as they wanted, and some students getting more votes than they wanted.

Lighten your job-hunting load

By Angie Hill

With the school year drawing to a close, job-hunting is a common activity for many students. However, many students are not aware of the many resources available to them. The Guelph Student Association has a number of resources available to help students find jobs.

Women's Campus Safety Audit Group seeking input

By Mel Taylor

A college is a place where many things happen. It is a place where students learn, grow, and develop. However, it is also a place where safety is a concern. The Women's Campus Safety Audit Group is a group of students who are working to improve campus safety.

Separating recyclables essential to program success

Grouping GMA, president John Leland cautions that 22 hours a week of recycling "has not been enough" to achieve the goal of separating recyclables. "There should be more time to work up with more curbside after curbside collection of these items."

"We can't put it all in one place, we can't put it all in one place," said Leland. "More education is needed to encourage the government. Now it's up to them."

Students accepted the need to do the work, however, Leland said that such an approach is not responsible for the future of the recycling program. "Students must be more responsible for the future of the program," Leland said.

"According to statistics, the people don't think about what they are recycling," Leland said. "They are recycling what they are recycling."

"People are not recycling what they are recycling. The items should be more responsible for the future of the program. They are recycling what they are recycling," Leland said.

Kathy Johnson, an environmental programming analyst, said that the students should be more responsible for the future of the program. "We should put more time in the program," Johnson said.

Students to mark professors' performance

By Lynn McClinton

Who makes the professors? How can students, in major classes, effectively deal with professors in their programs? How can departments and the administration best ensure the quality of education provided by their faculty?

Here September, a comprehensive review of the University of Idaho's Faculty Evaluation Program will be launched during sessions at the Faculty Council. It is an attempt to improve the program.

Professor salaries take up to 54.2 percent of the college's operating budget of $28 million. How can they do their job in an environment of student discontent? Continued with the quality of their education in mind, it is hard to compare as more responsible for providing an environment in that environment.

John MacKenzie, vice president of the University of Idaho, has been assigned with the Faculty Evaluation Committee. It is his job to ensure that the program is consistent with the University's mission and vision.

Professor MacKenzie, who came to the University of Idaho in 1984, has been assigned to review the program. He is also the chair of the Faculty Evaluation Committee. He is also the chair of the Faculty Evaluation Committee.
